

THYLORA · ErsatzReality

Digital story edition 001

Bramble Wick

The Lantern That Wouldn't Go Out — a nighttime story from EdereAriah.

ONE LANTERN PER WINDOW AFTER SUNSET

ER-BRAMBLE-WICK-001

Edition v2

US $1.99

EDITION IDENTITY

Bramble Wick — The Lantern That Wouldn't Go Out

Document class	Customer story edition, read-aloud
Edition	Edition v2 · THY-ED2-20260917 · supersedes v1 (retained)
Audience	Family reading, bedtime or classroom; child-safe
Purpose	One story and one question a child can carry into sleep
World layer	EdereAriah · hill-town of Bramble Wick
Rights	Original THYLORA / ErsatzReality work. No third-party rights engaged.
Imagery	Vector scenes drawn for this edition. No photography or stock.
Interworld barrier	Applied to world scenes under THY-INTERWORLD-OLDFILM-BARRIER-001
Delivery	PDF download via the THYLORA library (checkout-email sign-in)

Truth boundary

Bramble Wick is an EdereAriah location and is real in that layer. Nothing here reports an Earth event. Where a page shows the world, it is shown through the viewer plane, so the transmission is visible as an uneven film rather than a clean window.

Recorded as unknown

- THYLORA graphic mark: recorded UNKNOWN / not approved. Typographic wordmark only; no logo invented.
- Brand font family: recorded UNKNOWN. Families used are PROPOSED — NOT CANON.
- QR destinations: none verified, so no QR is printed.

THYLORA / ErsatzReality · Bramble Wick · EdereAriah story location

THYLORA EDITION
ER-BRAMBLE-WICK-001

Edition v2 - Q-ness

build THY-ED2-20260917
vector art generated for this edition
sha-256 recorded in the THYLORA backend

The lanterns in the windows

In the hill-town of Bramble Wick, every house kept one small lantern in the window after sunset. Nobody was required to. It was simply what people did.

The lanterns told travelers: Someone lives here. Someone is awake. If you need help, knock.

ACROSS THE VALLEY, ONE LIGHT AFTER ANOTHER WENT OUT. MARA'S STAYED.

PLACE	THE CUSTOM	NOBODY REQUIRED IT
Bramble Wick, a hill-town	One small lantern per window after sunset	It was simply what people did

ONE

The Wind

Mara Vale was nine and had been trusted with the east-window lantern for exactly six nights.

On the seventh night, a storm rolled down from the black hills. Wind pushed at the shutters, rain scratched the glass, and every few minutes the whole house gave a little wooden groan.

Mara’s father checked the roof. Her mother checked the pantry door. Mara checked the lantern. The flame bent almost flat.

“You can put it out,” her older brother said. “Nobody is traveling in this.”

Mara looked through the wet glass. “That is exactly when somebody might need it.”

She moved the lantern farther from the draft and lowered the wick. The flame became smaller, but steadier.

Across the valley, one light after another disappeared behind the rain. Mara’s stayed.

THE NIGHT	WEATHER	TRUSTED WITH
The seventh	A storm down from the black hills	The east-window lantern

TWO

The Knock

Near midnight came three knocks.

Not loud. Not desperate. Just three careful knocks that almost disappeared under the storm.

At the door stood an old courier with mud to his knees and a broken wheel-pin in his hand. His cart had failed on the north road. He had seen one light through the rain.

WHAT HE SAID

"I did not know whose house it was. I only knew somebody had left a way to be found."

TIME

Near midnight

AT THE DOOR

A courier, mud to his knees

IN HIS HAND

A broken wheel-pin

THREE

What the Lantern Was For

The family gave the courier dry socks, hot broth, and a place near the stove. At dawn, Mara’s father helped repair the cart.

Before leaving, the courier placed the broken wheel-pin on the table.

“Keep it,” he told Mara. “People remember lamps. But sometimes they forget what the lamp actually did.”

OBJECT HELD IN THE FAMILY · IRON, SHEARED AT ONE END · NO EARTH ARTEFACT IS REPRESENTED

GIVEN	AT DAWN	LEFT BEHIND
Dry socks, hot broth, a place near the stove	Her father helped repair the cart	The wheel-pin

What Mara kept

Years later, Bramble Wick changed. Streets became brighter. Roads became safer. Houses used different lights.

Mara still kept the old wheel-pin.

Not because she believed every lantern had to burn forever.

Because she understood the question underneath it:

THE QUESTION UNDERNEATH

When somebody cannot see a way forward, what can we leave visible enough for them to find us?

YEARS LATER	STILL KEPT	NOT BECAUSE
Brighter streets, safer roads	The old wheel-pin	Every lantern must burn forever

USE IT

A little question before sleep

Ask it once. Let the answer be small. Small is the point of the story.

What is one small thing a person can do that may matter much more to somebody else than it seems?

WORLD NOTE

Where this story sits

Bramble Wick is an EdereAriah story location. This story is original THYLORA / ErsatzReality material. No Earth historical event is being represented as fact.

IF YOU READ IT AGAIN

The lantern is not the point of the story. The wheel-pin is. One of them is remembered; the other is the evidence that something was actually done.

THE BROKEN WHEEL-PIN

OBJECT HELD IN THE FAMILY · IRON, SHEARED AT ONE END · NO EARTH ARTEFACT IS REPRESENTED

WORLD LAYER	LOCATION	RIGHTS
EdereAriah	Bramble Wick, a hill-town	Original THYLORA work